

Nadia Sutton, MD, MPH, is an Assistant Professor in the Department of Internal Medicine, Division of Cardiovascular Medicine, Section of Interventional Cardiology. Dr. Sutton received her Medical Degree from Loyola University of Chicago, where she graduated cum laude, with Honors in Research. She received her Masters in Public Health from Boston University. Her post-graduate training in Internal Medicine, Cardiovascular Medicine, and Interventional Cardiology were at the University of Michigan. She also completed research training through a National Institute of Health T32 training award. She is a physician-scientist who performs translational research, seeking to answer clinical questions using laboratory based techniques. Dr. Sutton is the recipient of career development awards from the American Heart Association and the National Institute on Aging and is a current Paul Beeson Scholar in Aging Research. Dr. Sutton serves on a number of national committees and boards, including for the American College of Cardiology and the American Heart Association.