Subject: in-Training recruitment email

Zofia Hetman, one of our students at the University of Cincinnati College of Medicine, is co-editor-in-chief of in-Training, an online peer reviewed publication by and for medical students worldwide. On behalf of Zofia and her in-Training colleagues, can you please spread the word via the email below to your students about opportunities and subscription to their twice-monthly newsletter. Thank you.

Laura L. Malosh, PhD
Assistant Dean, Student Affairs
University of Cincinnati, College of Medicine

Dear M1-M4 Students,

in-Training (in-training.org), the online peer-reviewed publication for medical students, is looking for medical students of all class years to submit articles and essays about their experiences in medicine for peer-edited online publication. We are also accepting applications for medical student editors and social media managers.

For potential writers:

With an emphasis on humanism in medicine, in-Training is run entirely by medical students and serves as an outlet for budding physician-journalists and writers at all medical schools around the globe. We seek articles on any topic relevant to the medical student community, including reflections, opinions, policy, research, poetry and art. Please follow the instructions on <https://in-training.org/get-involved> to submit your work.

For potential editors:

in-Training is looking for medical student editors to join our Editorial Board. If you are interested in editing and working with a dynamic staff to produce in-Training, please submit an application using the following link: <https://forms.gle/gM7DZob4MTNtehqx5>

For social media managers:

If you have experience with social media and are interested in working with the in-Training team, please submit an application using the following link: <https://forms.gle/KM1NTp5uaLJs4N7f9>

Since we went online in July 2012, we have published over 1,300 articles from 500 writers at 150 institutions in 15 countries. in-Training has been featured on NPR, USA Today, and Scientific American. We are also winners in the 2014 and 2015 Web Health Awards.

We invite students and faculty to visit in-Training at in-training.org and subscribe to our twice-monthly newsletter at in-training.org/newsletter. Please feel free to contact us at editorinchief@in-training.org if you have any questions.

Yours-in-training,

Alina Siddiqui and Zofia Hetman
Editors-in-Chief of in-Training
