

Target Audience	All students
Title	New Episode of Lerner Stories Project Now Available!
Summary	Ep. 3 features Lauren Struck (MD 22') who, at age 45 took the bold step of starting medical school after a successful career in education. With her husband and 2 children by her side, she's successfully endured med school's highs and lows
Additional Information	Nobody has proven that "age ain't nothing but a number" quite like Lauren Struck. At the age of 45, she took the audacious step of starting medical school and leaving an established career in education with the hope for something more. Moreover, she knew she would not be taking this step alone, her journey though medical school would be shared by her husband and two adolescent children. Certainly, she understood the risk that a change like this would have on her and her family, but in the words of Thomas Jefferson, "With great risk often comes great reward." Despite life's twists and turns, Lauren's courageous step has propelled her towards a present and future worthy of admiration. But it is the culmination of her experiences prior to entering the medical profession that has distinguished her from the rest. She encourages those of "a certain age" to enter the medical profession as she has; Noting, "The life experience that anyone my age brings is going to serve you really well, because you have things that you've learned that can't be taught" Watch Lerner Stories Project - Episode 3, now...
Submitted by	Christopher Veal, M4
Sponsored by	Office of Diversity, Equity and Inclusion
Form: Student Services - WeeklyWire Post Submission form  A new response was submitted on 09 April 2021, 09:58 AM	